Former Didsbury students perform musical concert

BY PAUL FREY MVP Staff

Brenna Former Didsbury students Hartmann and Marjorie-Anne Patterson performed a musical concert on July 19 at the Zion Evangelical Missionary Church.

Hartmann is currently studying violin at the University of Calgary while Patterson the University of Calgary while Patterson is studying piano at Ambrose University College in Calgary. The concert was a fundraiser to help pay for their studies. Hartmann took one year of music studies at the Victoria Conservatory before transferring to the University of Calgary where she will be entering her first year of study there in September. While Hartmann plans on taking the bachelor of music program, she said she hasn't yet of music program, she said she hasn't yet mapped out a future beyond her studies.

"I'm just taking it one step at a time," she said.

Hartmann said she was drawn to the violin after seeing a concert at a young age and deciding she wanted to play the instrument.

"(Studying music has) been challenging at times, but it's also rewarding," she said. Patterson, meanwhile, said after she completes her music degree in two more years, she wants to pursue graduate studies in music

"After (completing a bachelor's degree) I would probably like to go on to my masters and maybe doctorate," she said.

Patterson said her plan is to pursue post-graduate studies in performance, while also keeping her options open for a teaching position following a performance career.

"My plan is for performance and so there's competitions and festivals (to attend). Just try and get out as much as we can," she said.

'I started piano at age five and I always loved it and when I was 13 I decided I wanted to pursue it seriously," Patterson

Patterson said pursuing music at the post-secondary level is intense and challenging.

"It's a very competitive world and ... I don't know of the percentage that make it (in performance). It's very low but, I mean, it's not so much the (professional aspect), it's just the pursuit of it and just arning more and more. It's just so enjoy able that way. You just gotta see where it takes you," she said.

While Patterson said the rule of thumb for practise is quality over quantity, three to four hours per day for her is the norm. Hartmann said she tries for the same amount.

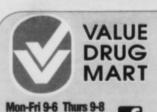

"We have a (rule that) you always prac tise quality instead of quantity and you should always have a goal in practicing, she said

Brenna Hartmann studies the notes while she plays Murray Adskin's Vocalise for Solo Violin on July 19 at tyhe Zion Evangelical Church. The concert was a joint one between Hartmann and fellow Didsbury pianist Marjorie Patterson, both of whom are taking post-secondary music studies Marorie-Anne Patterson performs Schubert's Opera 137 No. 1 in D Major on July 18 at the Zion Evangelical Church. The performance was in partnership with vionist Brenna Hartmann and was a fundraiser to help them offset costs of further post-secondary music studies.

Trio of Didsbury youth garner $2,500 in scholarships

BY PAUL FREY MVP Staff

A trio of Didsbury youth won Livestock Youth Scholarships as part of the Summer Synergy program in Olds July 7 to 11.

Andie and Josie Hadway and Katie Crawford received $1,000, $500 and $1,000 respectively after they travelled to Calgary and were presented to Calgary Stampede crowds on July 12 and 13 for all their hard work. Andie and Josie Hadway won scholarships for their bred heifers in the senior and intermediate divisions respectively, while Crawford earned $1,000 in the senior division for her cow-calf pair and heifer projects.

Andie Hadway said participants had to do a marketing project covering topics such as nutrition, grooming and showmanship prior to Summer Synergy.

While at Summer Synergy, participants showed their animals and judged other participants. While at the Calgary Stampede, scholarship recipients were interviewed by a panel of judges on topics such as participants' views on the agriculture industry.

This was the Hadways fifth appearance at Summer Synergy and the fifth time they each earned scholar-ship money. Andie will be travelling to Butler College in September in Kansas studying animal science while Josie. 15, will be continuing with her secondary school studies in the fall.

(Summer Synergy) was good. It was really competitive whether you were in junior, intermediate or senior. There's lots of good experience and learning opportunities and it provides lots of networking for yourself and new friendships every single year," Andie said.

(The scholarship) felt good because going to university this upcoming fall, so it's always good to receive the extra support from the agricultural (industry)," she said. "(Summer Synergy) has provided great back-ground for what I want to pursue ... since I'm taking an agricultural-based course.

Josie said while she still hasn't decided yet what her post-secondary future will look like, earning the scholar-ships each year while participating in Summer Synergy gives her great confidence. She said she enjoys interacting with the other participants and soaking up the great atmosphere

Meanwhile, Crawford said the best part of Summer Synergy for her is always seeing all of the different proj-ects and seeing some of the people she's made friends with from around the province that show up at the com-

"I like being able to interact with everyone. Not everyone that's there I normally compete with. There's lots of friends there from up north that I don't get to see all the time," she said, noting she's been at Summer Synergy three times

Crawford said she enjoyed the interview process that took place with management of Tervita in Calgary to determine who would earn a scholarship.

"It allows us to move up on our rankings depending on how we do on our interviews. We can get anywhere from that $1,000 scholarship and up to the $3,000 scholarship," she said.

Crawford, 18, plans on going to either Olds College or Lakeland College in Vermilion after completing Grade 12 in June 2015. She wants to then pursue further study after that aiming for a job in cattle genetics

EARTH WORK - Staff from the town's public works department hauled dirt and smoothed it out last week in the empty lot immediately west of the curling rink. They also added grass seed to the dirt in preparation for a green space. The space may also be used as an outdoor skating rink this winter.

Water users get credit on bill

MVP Staff

A billing error by the town has resulted in a pair of water customers receiving a credit of $600.

Josh and Ross Peters were charged $767 for the month of May 2013. After at least two visits to the town office to discuss the issue within the last year, Josh said the town credited the account $600 in May of this year, equal to 258 cubic metres of water.

"Obviously they read the meter wrong and they refused to come out and re-read the meter," Josh said, add-ing he was disappointed that it took as long as it did to rectify the situation. They should have sent a guy out to read the meter (sooner).

Peters said he is happy that the town

gave the brothers a credit, but he is disappointed that it took the town so long to respond to the issue

"It's great that we don't have to pay our water bill for a couple months, but sure would have been nice if they did that last year, when we questioned them about it," he said.

Peters said although the toilet had a slow leak in it, it was fixed in April of 2013, the month previous to the water bill being issued. Upon checking with a plumber, Peters said the plumber indicated that even with a slow leak, it wouldn't we caused such a huge water bill.

When asked for a comment on the issue, Nita Barthalow, the town's chief financial officer, said she could not comment due to the Freedom of Information and Protection of Privacy

Man injured in motorcycle crash

A 38 year-old Stony Plain man was taken to Foothills Medical Centre by ground ambulance on the afternoon of July 16 after the motorcycle he was rid-ing crashed while on Twp. Rd. 312, one kilometer south of Highway 766. The man received a head injury and friction scrapes to his arms. Police said he was wearing a skull-cap helmet rather than the full-face-type helmet.

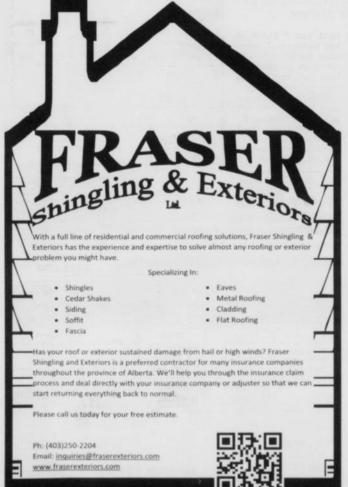

Local recipient receives fraudulent email

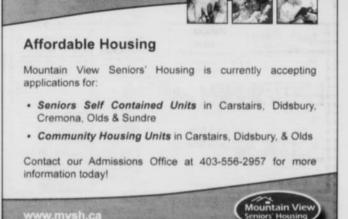

A Didsbury man recently received fraudulent email advising him that a local resident living nearby was on the sex offender registry. The man who received the email immediately contacted police, who determined the email to be fraudulent. The email in question had several distinctive features in it that police said indicated it was fraudulent, including differfonts used throughout the email, including different fonts in the same word and broken sentences. It also contained scriptural passages intended to bypass spam filters

Cpl. Warren Wright of the Didsbury RCMP said the recipient of the email correctly phoned police upon receiving the email. Wright said had the recipient clicked on the hyperlink that would have supposedly taken him to the sex offender database, more than likely it would have downloaded malware onto his computer

Council defers decision on recycling bin lids

BY PAUL FREY MVP Staff

Town council deferred a decision on purchasing recycling bin lids from Can-Pak Environmental favour of investigating other options the town could consider for enclosing the bins when residents place them outside for pickup

Councillors instructed administrators at the June 24 council meeting to get more information regarding the lids and bring it back to council for further consideration.

But council decided that since the lids the company would provide wouldn't fit the bins residents have, Can-Pak provided a revised cost estimate for lids that would fit, said Rick Mousseau, the town's mayor.

The revised costs higher were expected and would cost the town an addi-tional $13,314 over the service contract it already has with the company. Mousseau said councillors thought the town could possibly find a cheaper solution and so decided to wait for further information from administrators

"The price went up, so we kind of decided against it. Probably not all the people in Didsbury would want a lid," he said

"Hopefully we'll get (a lid) that will fit and that will suit our cost, Mousseau added.

GOOD WORK - Buy Low Foods, the parent company of AG Foods, handed out a number of $250 scholarships to area students recently as part of the support the company annually gives to students in communities where the company has stores. Tori Fulton, Elynne Poisson, Matthew Shields and Branden Gustavson also received awards but are not pictured.

Junior golfers get chance to practice skills

BY PAUL FREY MVP Staff

About 100 junior golfers roamed the fairways golf the Didsbury course on July 10 during the first of a five-week junior golf camp.

The camp will run every Thursday morning from 8 a.m. to noon and is designed to teach junior golfers aged six to 18 the finer points of the game. Lessons on putting, chipping and fairway play run about once per hour before the golfers are encouraged to play a few holes.

Dallas Johnson, who conducts the sessions, said that while the young golfers must be junior mem-bers of the club in order to participate, the lessons are free and anyone is encouraged to come out.

"It's just to promote golf and get young kids involved in golf," he said.

This is the third year for the program. Johnson said during the first year, about 40 golfers came out to the camp, doubling the junior membership from the previous when there wasn't year a program. Last year, about 60 junior members joined the Didsbury golf club and attended

Ally Crampton putts a ball on the practice green before heading out to play a few holes at the Didsbury golf course on July 10 during the first week of the junior golf program the camp, while this year there are over 100 junior members of the club.

"We want to get them hooked on golf. It's good exercise," Johnson said, adding that since golf is an individual sport it's as much about testing one's game against the course and trying to improve as it is about competing against other golfers. Logan Noren, 12, who began golfing about two years ago, said he wanted to attend the program to improve his ball striking ability and to improve his play on and around the green

"To see if I can hit the ball a little harder so I can hit it farther. he said. "(Around the green) to see if I can get it in the hole (from) really far away.'

Maria Lemon, 13, who also participated, said thought it was a great idea.

'It's a really good program. I really like golfing and I wanted to improve my skills," she said.

Gil's Truck and Auto hosts a fundraising tournament each year to allow junior members of the club to take the program for free. Last September, the latest version of the tournathe latest ment raised $1,500 to buy junior-sized rental clubs for the golfers to rent from the pro shop, balls and prizes for the junior golfers

On the last day of the program, the golfers will compete in a mini-tournament.

"Without (Gil's Truck and Auto) it wouldn't be as successful as it is now," Johnson said.

Province has tough decision in tobacco fight

The decades-long battle between tobacco companies and health care providers in Canada have opened a new chapter this spring with an offensive undertaken by a coalition of medical and legal experts.

The coalition, which includes the Canadian Medical Association, recently launched its Campaign for Justice on Tobacco Fraud. A principal goal of the campaign is to convince provincial governments not to take out-of-court settlements in ongoing legal battles with tobacco companies.

Nine provinces have launched lawsuits against Canadian tobacco manufacturers, with claims in excess of $10 billion, to recover public health care costs resulting from tobacco use.

The coalition says it is vital that the provinces resist the temptation to take out-of-court settlement cash from the tobacco companies.

"Ultimately this isn't about

"Ultimately this isn't about money," the coalition said. "It's about winning the battle for health of Canadians and exposing who the enemy is in that battle.

"Manufacturers will not negotiate in a meaningful way unless attorneys general in Canada are prepared both to go to trial and, preferably, take the manufacturers through trial."

SINGLETON

The coalition says unless tobacco companies are made to face trial, those same companies will "demand that provinces make huge concessions in order to obtain a settlement."

As well, the coalition believes that public trials, instead of out-of-court settlements, are the only way to make public the tobacco companies' documents related to "tobacco risks, nicotine addiction, second-hand smoke and targeting of youth."

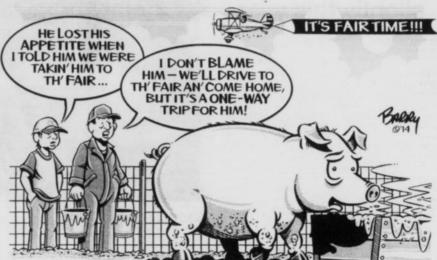

While the coalition obviously has the well-being of Canadians at heart, whether provincial governments will be prepared to set aside billions of dollars in out-of-court settlements in favour of hard-fought and very costly trials remains an open question.

As one of the largest benefactors of legal tobacco sales, provincial governments are of course caught in the middle of this health care-tobacco company battle.

And all the while, tobacco-related illnesses continue to cost Alberta taxpayers millions and millions of dollars every year in health care spending, not to mention the ongoing suffering of cancer victims and their families.

This new Campaign for Justice on Tobacco Fraud represents a vigorous new effort by the anti-tobacco interests in Canada. Health care and legal experts have put their cards on the table and ordinary Canadians can be thankful for that.

The big question now is whether provincial governments are prepared to make the long-term commitment necessary to make this new public health campaign a success. West Central Alberta residents will be watching closely to see how the Hancock

Commentary

One definition of a hero

MICHAEL FLOOD

Among the earliest philosophical thoughts I can remember having were about heroes: what made someone a hero?

I had heard Michael Jordan and other sports celebrities referred to as 'heroes'. But comparing them against the heroes I knew from fiction, like Frodo Baggins or the children from C.S. Lewis' The Lion, The Witch, and the Wardrobe, gave me my first inkling of what a 'category mistake' is using the wrong concept to describe something. Sports celebrities are more properly described as 'role models', people that other people looked up to and sought to imitate. A hero, by contrast, is someone who deserves to be imitated.

As a preliminary definition, I would say that a hero is someone who manifests, in the face of adversity, a virtue like courage to an exceptionally high degree. This is what makes them worthy of being imitated - they show us both that it is possible to be better and how to be so.

how to be so.

If most alleged role models in our society are lacking, where are we to find heroes to look up to? It's natural to look to military heroes, men who showed extraordinary bravery in times of great personal danger. Bravery also makes for good stories, ones worth retelling. To read the biographies of Victoria Cross and Medal of Honor winners is to be continually impressed by men who, by amazing feats and steel nerves, turned the course of battles and saved the lives of their brothers in arms. But military bravery is respected mostly by our own side, and then mostly when we win the war in question. We don't pay a lot of mind to Germany's Iron Cross winners, or Japanese soldiers decorated with their Military Medal of Honor, and brave Americans who served in Vietnam still do not get a great deal of recognition for their valor.

deal of recognition for their valor.

Where then do we seek heroes worthy of admiration and emulation?

I'd like put forward a man whose accomplishments were achieved peacefully, though not without enormous personal risk, a man who demonstrated exemplary courage through extreme (and in fact unique) danger to advance our knowledge of our universe. My nomination is Neil Alden Armstrong, the American astronaut who became the first human being to set foot on another stellar body 45 years ago this month, on July 20th, 1969.

Today, we remember only

Today, we remember only the achievement and forget the dangers Armstrong and his fellow astronauts, Buzz Aldrin and Michael Collins, endured for those eight days in space. They risked death not only during the launch but by solar flare and equipment malfunction during the flight. The lunar module, the "Eagle", that Armstrong and Aldrin piloted to the lunar surface and back was untested for its role (and in fact was untestable). Through the flight there were numerous mechanical faults and malfunctions that required quick thinking and steady nerves on the part of the crew. Through it all the astronauts were always calm and collected.

I nominate Armstrong not just for his bravery in advancing human knowledge of the solar system but for his legendary humility after the Apollo 11 landing. He was known as the "reluctant American hero" for the rest of his life as he shunned the limelight and did not take advantage of the fame his achievement brought him. While he put in public appearances and made himself available for interviews, he preferred to live quietly in Ohio and teach engineering at the local university.

He is worthy of emulation partly because he is emulable in so many ways - not for his particular accomplishment (until we start going back to the Moon, that is) but for his personal character. Armstrong was not superhuman in any respect, but simply a bright, dutiful, kind man who believed in doing his best.

I find the greatest symbol of his (and the other astronauts') humility to be the insignia patch they designed for their mission: it shows an Eagle on the surface of the moon clutching an olive branch in its talons. The Earth can be seen in the background. Unlike other mission patches, their names are featured nowhere on it: the crew agreed that they wanted the patch to reflect the achievements and contributions of all the thousands upon thousands of people who contributed to the successful mission.

Elks parade changing route slightly this year

BY PAUL FREY

The route of the annual Elks parade will be changing slightly this year after receiving the go-ahead from town council to do so at council's July 8 meeting.

Elks club had asked council to close off 20 Street from 20 Avenue to 19 Avenue beginning at 6 a.m. until after the parade in order to set up for the pancake breakfast.

The club also asked that 20 Avenue be closed from 10 Street to 20 Street and that as all side roads leading to 20 Avenue also be blocked off beginning at 9 a.m.

A new set of closures was asked for and granted by council, including clos ing 15 Avenue from 20 Street to 10 Street to allow for the parade to proceed east down 15 Avenue past the Bethany Care centre. The breakfast and parade will take place on August 16 to coincide with the Didsbury rodeo.

Now that the man was more confident in the transaction, he sent the money. He has not heard back from the seller since, and has contacted Amazon representatives, who said that the fulfillment centre is not an operation of Amazon.

After reporting the incident to police, they looked up the woman listed on the pieces of identification.

It turns out that she was a victim of fraud herself, and that she had given her I.D. to a fraudster previously.

Thus, the fraudster is using her I.D. to legitimize a fraud attempt, which in this case was vary successful, said Wright.

"Police advise the public to be very wary of doing online transactions. Do your research on any online financial services and ensure they're legitimate.

"Also understand when you're doing transactions with people online, there's a million ways you can be defrauded, and the old-fashioned method of meeting face-to-face and a shaking hands is preferred, as well as using cash, certified cheques or bank drafts."

He added that when considering an online transaction, the first question in one's mind should be "how am I going to get ripped off?" he added.

"And again, the public are always welcome to contact the RCMP if they are getting into a financial relationship and are wary of the circumstances

He said police are more than willing to provide advice based on previous experience, and that the Canadian Anti-Fraud Centre website is a wealth of fraud-related knowledge.
